

Lenore Rodicio, Former Provost of Miami Dade College, Joining Aspen Institute College Excellence Program as Senior Fellow

December 9, 2020

We are thrilled to announce that Lenore Rodicio, a longtime leader at Miami Dade College, is joining the Aspen Institute College Excellence Program (CEP) as a senior fellow.

Rodicio joined Miami Dade College as a chemistry instructor in 2002; served as dean of academic affairs and vice provost for student achievement; and was until recently executive vice president and provost. MDC is the nation's largest community college, with 160,000 students, and a 2019 winner of the Aspen Prize for Community College Excellence.

Lenore Rodicio

“We are delighted to have Lenore joining the Aspen team,” said Josh Wyner, CEP’s executive director and an Aspen vice president. “Her extensive experience leading scaled student success changes at Miami Dade College will add tremendously to the College Excellence Program’s efforts. Her leadership is a big reason Miami Dade students achieve high and improving levels of success in degree completion, employment, and four-year transfer. That is what won Miami Dade College the Aspen Prize.”

Rodicio joins a team of senior fellows who support CEP’s efforts to advance student success and equity at the nation’s community colleges, by serving as mentors, faculty, and content experts in our fellowship programs and direct support of college leaders and teams. Other CEP senior fellows are Maria Harper-Marinick, former chancellor of the Maricopa Colleges in Arizona; Mary Rittling, former president of Davidson County Community College in North Carolina; and Bob Templin, former president of Northern Virginia Community College.